Certification, accreditation, and licensure are all professional development opportunities for students and health care workers who want to improve their knowledge and skills in the health care industry. While some may use these terms interchangeably, each term means something different from the others. Certification, accreditation, and licensure can all help health science students advance in their careers, but in very different ways. Board Certification. State License. What is it? Licensure titles differ due to the different laws. The most common titles are: Licensed Professional Counselor (LPC), Licensed Mental Health Counselor (LMHC), Licensed Clinical Professional Counselor (LCPC), and Licensed Professional Clinical Counselor (LPCC). Issued by each state regulatory board. What is its purpose?
