The International Society of Ultrasound in Obstetrics and Gynecology (ISUOG) is a scientific organization that encourages sound clinical practice, teaching and research related to diagnostic imaging in women's healthcare. The ISUOG Clinical Standards Committee (CSC) has a remit to develop Practice Guidelines and Consensus Statements as educational recommendations that provide health-care practitioners with a consensus-based approach for diagnostic imaging. This document summarizes Practice Guidelines regarding how to perform Doppler ultrasonography of the fetoplacental circulation. It is of utmost importance not to expose the embryo and fetus to unduly harmful ultrasound energy, particularly in the earliest stages of pregnancy. The use of ultrasonography in obstetrics and gynecology has made sweeping changes in the management of pregnant patients. The purpose of this chapter is to review existing recommendations regarding the use of ultrasonography in pregnancy. This chapter is intended to provide information about current ultrasonographic practice, guidance for performing the examination, and assistance in recognizing common anomalies. Future ideas and new technology will be reviewed at the end of the chapter. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. Ultrasound images are generated using the same principle as sonar. High-frequency sound waves (3.5-7.5 MHz) pass from the surface of the ultrasound transducer through the tissues of the imaging target.
